

Speaker Bio | Dr. Carrie James

Dr. James is a sociologist and researcher and is the current co-director of Project Zero at Harvard. Her work focuses on young people's digital experiences, including opportunities and challenges for their well-being, social connections, and civic lives. She loves to translate research insights into practical tools and wisdom for families and educators. She is a longtime collaborator with Common Sense Education on their digital citizenship curriculum. With Emily Weinstein, James is co-author of the book, Behind Their Screens: What Teens are Facing (And Adults are Missing). She has a PhD in sociology from New York University.
